

Leading Global Manufacturing Through Complexity

Scott Ellyson, CEO of East West Manufacturing

The latest must-listen podcast is here!

As global manufacturing continues to face disruption - from supply chain volatility to shifting geopolitical and economic pressures, strong, adaptive leadership has never been more critical. In the latest episode of Industry Today's Podcast, Scott Ellyson, CEO of East West Manufacturing, joins the conversation to share how he leads one of the industry's most dynamic global manufacturing organizations.

Ellyson reflects on the realities of operating across multiple regions and cultures, emphasizing the importance of execution, transparency, and long-term thinking in a complex manufacturing environment. He discusses how East West Manufacturing approaches supply chain resilience, balances global scale with local accountability, and invests in people and processes to maintain consistency across its operations.

The discussion also explores broader trends shaping the manufacturing sector, including evolving customer expectations, risk management, and the leadership mindset required to navigate ongoing change. Ellyson's insights offer valuable perspective for manufacturing executives, operations leaders, and anyone focused on building resilient, globally connected industrial organizations.
